A Vessel Driven by Pumps. At the foot of Twentieth street, Brooklyn, there reposes on the stocks, a craft that might well be called "Great Expections," for her inventor and designer expects from her nothing less than a speed of thirty miles an hour, a speed quite equal to the average rate of railway travel, and so far superior to that attained by ocean steamers or torpedo boats that they would be simply nowhere in a race. Naval engineers agree that the idea is preposterous, that this astonishing rate of speed can't be attained as the inventor proposes. Her length over all is about 110 feet and on the water line 95 feet. Her beam is 23 feet. Her draught will be about four feet and she will have pleuty of free-board. In the stern post of the boat, about two feet above the bottom of the keel, is a circular opening about six inches in diameter. It looks like the usual hole for a pro-peller shaft. To the hole a nezzle is to be attached, and water ejected through it with such tremendous force, the inventor says, as to drive the boat forward at the rate of thirty miles an hour. This idea of moving a boat by pumping out a continuous stream of wa ter is not a new one. The British govern ment several years ago built a vessel called the Water Witch, which was to be impelled by hydraulic pressure but she proved a failure. Private individuals from time to time bave caught the infection of the idea, but accomplished nothing. In recent years not much has been heard of this method of propulsion because the conviction is pretty general that the theory is impracticable.

In the Brooklyn boat instead of discharg-In the Brooklyn boat instead of discharging a comparatively big stream of water the stream will be one and one quarter inches in diameter. The pressure will be, it is said, something like ten thousand pounds to the square inch—simply immense. The new boat is to have engines of 1,500 horse power, tremendously powerful engines for a boat of her size, and the inventor says that the stream of water these engines will pump HENRY BRENGLE, No. 521 King street, still keeps all the delicacies of the season, and his stock will make winter seem warmer and add to the fall the helidays. The claim asserted by the said George L. be the absence of any rudder, because the nezzle through which the steel-like stream of water is discharged can be turned to the right or left, thus making the boat spin around much quicker than a rudder could do it. Dr. Walter M. Jackson, the inventor, claims to have applied his hydraulic theory to a fifty foot launch two years ago and to have obtained a speed of twelve miles an hour, the stream of water that pushed the launch at this rate being forced through a hole only one-sixteenth of an inch in diameter. This little spray, Dr. Jackson says, drilled a bole through a four inch plank. THE STREET GAMBLERS OF CHINA .- One never failing source of amusement was watching the street gamblers. You see a man, generally the most innocent looking of Chinamen, if one Chinaman can be said to look in any way different from another, unless in size, walking along with what looks like a rather large umbrella. He stops in what he thinks to be a convenient place, always near a corner, sticks this machipe on the ground, which in some ingenious way becomes a gambling table, marked into equares and epots. In an instant he is surrounded by a crowd of all ages, and the have mysteriously disappeared and the crowd has scattered. I believe the law is are the police of our country. I never could get to understand the game, but it seems to be run on the good old principle that the odds should be in favor of the bank as the bank seemed always to win. watching the game for several days, I came to the conclusion that the person who raised the cry of police must a confederate, as it was always done when the stakes were quite large, that is, for that game, as only pieces of copper were placed on the board, and in his anxiety to get away the man would not wait to hand back to the players STOP COUGHING—LUNT'S COUGH SYRUP Would not wait to hand back to the players their money, but would disappear, money, trial. Littell's Living Age.

In 1889 The Living Age enters upon its 46th year. Approved in the outset by Judge Story, Chanceller Kent, President Adams, historians ous way becomes a gambling table, into squares and spots. In an instant he is surrounded by a crowd of all ages, and the game goes merrily on. Suddenly a cry of police goes up and in an instant man and table have mysteriously disappeared and the crowd has scattered. I believe the law is strict against gambling, but the police seem about as efficient to stop and prevent it as are the police of our country. I never could get to understand the game, but it geometric heavily in the police of the run on the good old principle formula to the country of the coun formation, from the entire body of foreign periodical literature, and from the pens of the foremost living writers.

The ablest and most cultivated intellects in ev ery department of literature, science, politics and art, find expression in the periodical literature of Europe, and especially of Great Britain.

The Living Age, forming four large volumes a year, furnishes, from the great and generally in-accessible mass of this literature, the only compi-lation that, while within the reach of all, is satisfactory in the completeness with which it em-braces whatever is of immediate interest or of solid, permanent value. It is therefore indispensable to every one who wishes to keep pace with the events or intellectual progress of the time, or to cultivate in himself or his family general intelligence and literary taste. Published weekly at $8 a year, free of postage.
